When Girls Starve Themselves

The skinny 16-year-old girl sits toying with a bowl of tossed salad. It is her only meal for the day. She is quick to tell anyone who will listen how much weight she has lost recently and the low number of calories she consumes daily. After a few minutes, she leaves in a hurry to hunt up a tennis partner—while the unfinished salad remains on the table. She has anorexia nervosa.

Anorexia nervosa is a mysterious eating disorder found mostly in teenage girls. The anorexic patient usually starts dieting because of some personal setback, which can range from a broken love affair to a friend's offhand remark about her appearance. She soon becomes obsessed with thinness and may lose 20 to 30 percent of her normal weight. But she feels fine, thinks she looks terrific, and will keep dieting until malnutrition and starvation set in.

The National Institute of Mental Health supports a three-facility study of the different ways to treat anorexic patients. Programs at the Illinois State Psychiatric Institute and at the Universities of Iowa and Minnesota include hospitalization to regulate the patient's eating schedule and psychotherapy and encouragement to help the patient cope with her problem.

Behavior modification is also successful in combating anorexia nervosa. At the Illinois State Psychiatric Institute, patients go without telephone calls and mail for the first five days and must gain a pound every five days after that to earn those privileges. In a few weeks, they must gain two pounds every five days to keep their privileges. This improves eating habits and usually results in a patient's discharge from the hospital.

Each patient must weigh in every day to keep track of her progress. The more stubborn girls will try to outwit the scales by attaching weights under their clothing, or eating salt and then drinking water.

If these girls refuse to eat or to admit they have a problem, they will often be sent to a general hospital to be treated for physical decline. And some will go to the other extreme by losing all appetite control and gorging themselves on food. But many girls return to their normal weight and adopt a healthier self-image.

Researchers are still not sure whether the major cause of anorexia is physical or psychological. But they have learned how to break through the patient's resistance to weight gain and believe this is the key to successful treatment.

CANCER Answer line

American Cancer Society

A regular feature, prepared by the American Cancer Society, to help save your life from cancer.

A hardware store salesman explains: "A lot of my customers keep telling me to quit smoking, but nobody tells me how. It's a tough habit to shake!"

ANSWERline: A quick call or visit to your American Cancer Society Unit will provide you with "how to" information and perhaps an invitation to a smoking withdrawal program. For the moment, how about these ideas? Pick a Q (Quit) day and just quit. If you can't, smoke one less cigarette a day. Make each cigarette you smoke a special decision and put off making the decision. Tell your friends, customers and family that you are quitting because a public commitment bolsters will power. Did you know that your food will taste better? Every time you are inclined to smoke ask yourself: lung cancer? heart diseas? emphysema? Are cigarettes worth lung cancer or heart disease or emphysema?

A Sunbelt resident asks: "Is too much sun the only cause of skin cancer?

ANSWERline: While excessive sun exposure is the major—and preventable—cause of much skin cancer, some cases are caused by exposure to other kinds of radiation. Cancer-causing chemicals, e.g., arsenic, burns, and a genetic predisposition can also act in the development of skin cancer. Fortunately, most skin cancers, because they are so highly visible, are detected while the disease is in an early stage and are therefore highly curable. Because of your place of residence, you should be especially careful about sun exposure.

A day care center worker asks: "How accurate is the Pap test?"

ANSWERline: The Pap test is a quick and painless procedure during which a sample of vaginal fluid and cells scraped from the surface of the cervix are collected for later microscopic examination. It is almost 100 percent accurate in detecting cancer of the uterine cervix (the neck of the womb). The test can actually detect cancer before the onset of symptoms. There is, however, another kind of uterine cancer, endometrial cancer, which begins in the lining of the womb. The Pap test is only about 60 percent effective in detecting this kind of uterine cancer. There are other techniques that are used to detect endometrial cancer and they can also be performed in a physician's office or clinic. Nonetheless, Pap tests are important for women from the time they become sexually active throughout life. To safeguard her health, each woman should have routine pelvic examinations including a Pap test and whatever other tests her physician suggests. This is important because when uterine cancer is detected in an early stage, the chances of cure are excellent.

A computer programmer asks: "What is thermography?"

ANSWERline: Thermography is a way of recording the heat patterns of the skin. While it is not as reliable as other methods (such as breast x-rays and physical examination), thermography is used in conjunction with them to detect possible breast cancer. Abnormalities within the breast raise the temperature of the affected area and it is this change that thermography is able to register.

GOOD NEWS FOR HOMEMAKERS

By Shirley W. Walton Extension Agent

Corduroy: Plush, Comfortable and Washable

Corduroy, with all of its many good qualities and versatility, will be a fashion winner for fall. Corduroy is durable, comfortable, washable, soft and available in a variety of weights, wales and rich earthy shades and prints.

The fashionable fabric will lend itself to the coordinated fall fashion scene. This fall you will see many pieces added up to the best in sporty looks, the coordinates and separates that everyone will want to live in.

Traditionally, corduroy has been an all cotton fabric. Blends of cotton and polyester have become popular in the interest of greater shrinkage control and wash and wear characteristics. Narrow to wide wales or ribs on a plain or twill weave back give corduroy quite a variety in look, feel and wearability.

Pin wale, the narrowest ribbing, is generally light weight and suitable to infants' wear, lounging apparel, bedspreads, curtains and pillows. Mid and seven wale are the most popular for the children's wear, sportswear, casual styles, suits and dresses. Wide wale, a heavy weight corduroy with thick, plush pile, is often chosen for coats, suits and sportswear. Novelty weaves with sculptured or textured effects are popular in fashions and home furnishings.

Good news this fall for the home sewer is that corduroy keeps its soft, plush feel washing after washing. Laundering corduroy often before heavy soil and stains set in maintains good looks. It is so much easier to sew on as well as to care for since the cotton has been blended with polyester.

Before laundering, group similar colors and remove decorative trims if necessary. Some bleeding of dark shades may occur even after a number of washings. Should you have any doubt, wash dark colored pieces separate or with other dark items.

As with other fabrics, pre-treat spots, stains or heavily soiled areas. Turn items inside out to prevent any lint clinging to the pile. Check your washer and dryer lint screen to be sure they are clean. Wash and dry small loads for minimum wrinkling. Remember, if we try to put too many clothes in the dryer at one time, this can cause wrinkling. With corduroy you want to avoid this and it comes out of the dryer ready to go back on the hanger.

A permanent press cycle on both the washer and dryer should be used for cotton polyester blended corduroy. The wash temperatue would depend on the color, as well as the degree of soil. Be sure when you purchase fabric for making corduroy garments that you ask for a care instruction label. Of course, if you are purchasing a ready-made garment, be sure to read this label before purchasing the garment.

Machine drying restores fluffness to corduroy and helps to eliminate the need for pressing. Remove article from the dryer while slightly damp to maintain floss and prevent wrinkling. Smooth and shape garments on hangers. Seams should be straight and the pile may be gently brushed in one direction when dry. A fabric softener used in the washer or dryer will help to fluff the pile and make touch-up pressing easier.

Should you have questions about sewing with corduroy, you may call or write the Appomattox County Extension Office. Our P. O. Box is 488, Appomattox, Va. 24522, or our phone number is 352-8244.

Be sure that all corduroy is cut in one direction. Some people like the pile brushed downward. Others say that corduroy has a richer, plusher look if the pile all brushes upward. Whatever your choice is, be sure that all the pile goes in one direction when cutting.

Corduroy makes the home sewer would be, should you choose from the beautiful paisley corduroy prints, be sure that you purchase enough fabric to take care of any extra matching you might have to do of pattern. Corduroy is truly a plush, comfortable and now a very washable fabric.
